This piece, by the President and CEO of Facing History, is an eloquent reflection of one person's response. Facing History has compiled a list of resources to support our thinking in many directions on this topic.

The New York Times Learning Network has a forum for students to post their reactions, along with lesson materials. This is a good way to encourage students to voice their feelings with the wider world and to read what students in other places are saying.

This interactive website from the Washington Post is a collection of all information the reporters could find regarding police shootings, dating back to 2015.

PBS Learning Media has a 5-minute segment from PBS News hour, along with suggestion questions, activities and additional resources.

Listenwise posted this lesson about Ahmaud Arbery on May 19 (interview with a sociologist).

Facing History provides materials to help us to understand police shootings within the context of the legacy of slavery.

The Choices program developed these lessons and resources regarding the Black Lives Matter movement within the context of the Civil Rights Movement.
